SECTION B

[75 marks]

Answer three questions in all, one from each genre

Poetry

1. Grace Nichols' We the Women vividly depicts the experiences of slave women during the era of slavery, highlighting their pain, endurance, and collective voice. Using references to imagery, tone, and symbolism, discuss how the poet conveys the lives of these women, paying attention to the emotional and historical context of the poem. (25 marks)

2. In Koramma's Valiant Owusu, the image of the father is central to the poem's meaning. With close reference to the text, discuss how the father is portrayed — considering his strength, values, and eventual fate — and show how his representation contributes to the overall theme of the poem. (25 marks)

Prose

2. Albert Camus' The Stranger presents Meursault as an unusual character whose indifference and choices lead to a tragic outcome. With appropriate textual evidence, discuss Meursault as a tragic hero, examining his actions, worldview, and the eventual consequences of his trial and execution. (25 marks)

4. One of the striking elements in Camus' The Stranger is the preoccupation with death and the sense of life's futility. With references to key episodes in the novel, discuss the theme of death and the meaninglessness of life, showing how the protagonist's attitude reinforces Camus' philosophy of existentialism. (25 marks)

Drama

5. In Wole Soyinka's The Lion and the Jewel, Baroka and Lakunle represent two contrasting visions of African society: tradition and modernity. Compare and contrast these two characters, focusing on their personalities, roles in the play, and what they symbolize about cultural conflict and change. (25 marks)

6. The arrival of the stranger with the magazine is a turning point in Wole Soyinka's The Lion and the Jewel. Discuss how this event affects the plot, particularly in relation to Sidi's perception of herself, her relationship with Baroka and Lakunle, and the broader themes of tradition and modernity in the play. (25 marks)
